

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

PREFACE

In the summer of 1892, when I began the work which has now reached completion, I had no larger aim than a critical publication of the text of the poem which is herewith offered to students of the origins of the French and English literatures. But the unfortunate death of Prof. Dr. Edouard Mall, of Würzburg, having left the whole subject of the Purgatory legend as it were in suspenso, and the fundamental question of the dialect of Marie de France being unsettled, it seemed desirable to add studies upon these subjects, as well as to present the new material as to the language of the author gathered in an examination of the hitherto unstudied manuscript of the Espurgatoire.

My aim has been to restore as nearly as possible (with the usual concessions to facilitate reading) the text of the poem as it came from the hands of its author. The means relied upon to reach this end have been the edition by Dr. K. Warnke of the Lays of Marie de France (an excellent work, though not entirely free from errors) ; the manuscripts of Marie's Fables which, for several years, have been before the Romance Languages Seminary of the Johns Hopkins University ; and, finally, the Latin Tractatus of Henry of Saltrey (of which the Espurgatoire is a translation) especially that version of it contained in the British Museum MS. Arundel 292.

of Marie's poem from the single Paris manuscript, which, from indications, is two or three removes from the original, and somewhat carelessly written, has been a task not without obstacles. However short I may have fallen of the full attainment of my aim, I am glad to have been able to promote a closer acquaintance with an interesting figure in literary history, and with a legend which embodies so well the religious ideas of western Europe in the twelfth century.

The latitude which I have permitted myself in the matter of orthography seeks its main justification in my belief that, Marie's poem being a translation of a Latin treatise upon a Church subject, a tendency to Latinization was inevitable.

INTRODUCTION

THE history of the legends connected with the Purgatory of Saint Patrick in Ireland was first made known to a wide circle of modern readers by the eminent English scholar, Thomas Wright,¹ just fifty years ago. Briefly described, the so-called "Purgatory" was a cavern which was situated upon an island in Lough Dearg (County Donegal), and which, according to the general belief, furnished to men a veritable entrance to the world beyond the grave. Various alleged descents into this cavern during the twelfth and following centuries gave rise to a considerable body of literature, in which nearly all the languages of modern Europe are represented. Some of these works, mainly through the instrumentality of the Church, acquired an extraordinary popularity, especially in England and France. Spreading thence to Spain and Italy, the legend furnished the subject of a drama to Calderon, and almost certainly formed part of that common circle of contemporary ideas from which Dante drew the imperishable conceptions of the Divina Commedia.

The first mention of the Purgatory legend in literature is made by the monk Jocelin of Furness, in his Vita Sancti Patricii (about 1183).² This writer attaches the legend not to the island in Lough Dearg, but to a mountain in another locality. Certain people, he says, having passed the night on this summit, and having been (as they reported) grievously tormented, have believed themselves purged of their sins and so saved from the gates of hell. Whence, he adds, comes the name "Purgatory."

² Jocelin's Vita was translated by L. E. Swift, The Life and Acts of St. Patrick, etc. Dublin 1809. The passage on the Purgatory occurs Chap. 172, p. 229.

Substantially the same form of the legend, but now connected with Lough Dearg, is that given by Giraldus Cambrensis in his Topographia Hibernica (1185-1187).¹ Giraldus adds some particulars and explains that the torments are inflicted by malign spirits, and that people say that penance thus undergone exempts the penitent from suffering for his sins after death.

Neither Jocelin nor Giraldus had the idea that the Purgatory was an entrance to the other world. This noteworthy development of the legend appears first in the now famous Tractatus de Purgatorio Sancti Patricii, written in Latin by a monk, Henry (?)² belonging to Saltrey, a Cistercian abbey in Huntingdonshire. This work was probably written about 1188 (see below). It narrates the experiences of an Irish "knight" (miles) named "Owein," who descended into the cavern to do penance for his sins and was led in turn through hell and the terrestrial paradise, and was finally permitted to look upon the glowing portals of the celestial paradise.

Henry's Tractatus laid the foundation of the fame

of the Purgatory throughout Western Europe, and formed the basis of nearly all the numerous notices and brief descriptions of the place and its wonders which are frequent in mediæval writers. Moreover, it attracted to Ireland other penitents, whose descents were in turn written about and no doubt believed in. Such was the descent of Raymond de Perilhos (1397), described in provençal;¹ that of William Staunton (1409) written in English²; and that of Laurentius Ratold (1411) written in Latin.³ Two other important reworkings of the legend—certain chapters in the older versions of the Italian romance, *Guerino il Meschino*⁴ and the drama of Calderon⁵—seem to derive from Henry's Tractatus only, and not to be based upon any fresh pilgrimages to the sacred place.

At this point, it may be interesting to inquire what was the strong attraction which led the intelligent minds of this period to follow with such eager interest the accounts of visits to the other world? It was, no doubt, the conception of human life which the Church of Rome upheld and which went far to determine the intellectual and moral atmosphere of the time. Man's chief care in this world, it was taught, was to so act as to insure his safety in the next. To avoid sin, to atone for sin, to escape hell and attain paradise, these were the concerns which lay most constantly and heavily upon the general consciousness. Add to this the absence of faith in the fixedness of Nature's laws, resulting in a ready belief in miracles and wonders of all kinds, and one can in some degree feel the force of the ardent interest which seized with avidity upon works like the Tractatus, which were believed to be the narratives of those who had actually seen and tasted either the frightful sufferings which awaited the confirmed sinner, or the untold felicities which were prepared for the elect.

It is the Tractatus of Henry,—one of the most striking works in the large mediæval literature which deals with the state of the soul after death,—enlarged by several additions, that Marie de France rendered into Old French verse “that it might be intelligible to lay folk.”¹ In doing this, she adopted the metre and many of the stereotyped conventions of the court poetry of her time, which in turn had taken its color from the troubadours.² The manuscript, of which a copy is published herewith, is the only one of Marie's poem now known to exist, although undoubtedly there have been others which are now lost. Marie, however, was not the only writer to translate

² Cp. ll. 16, 189, 1919 ff., 2119 ff.

Henry's Tractatus into old French verse. M. P. Meyer¹ has collected the scattered notices of six other versions in Old French, four of which are anonymous. M. Meyer has also printed extracts from two of these,—the translations of Geofroi de Paris and of Bérol; of three others, Mr. Ward has given liberal extracts²; of the sixth, the beginning and end have been printed, also by M. Meyer³.

As might be expected, the Latin MSS. of the Tractatus which have been preserved do not present a uniform text. Dr. E. Mall gave⁴ the results of his examination of the MSS. of the Tractatus owned by the British Museum, and of two others on the continent, and published three of these texts, viz.: (a) that of Bamberg (denoted by "A"), (b) that printed by Colgan⁵ (denoted by "C"), (c) that of the British Museum, Arundel 292 (denoted by "K"). No one of the MSS. examined by him, according to Mall, presents a version which could have been used by Marie in making her translation. It will be useful for us now to substantiate this conclusion of Mall's.

This text, according to the Catalogue of the MSS. of Cambridge II., 328 and V., 594, was taken from a Cambridge MS. numbered F. f. 1. 27, fo. 568 (or 570). But Hardy, Descriptive Catalogue of Materials relating to the History of Great Britain and Ireland I., p. 72 ff., says Colgan's text is that of a MS. at Lincoln College Oxford, No. 28, fo. 75-98.

According to Ward,¹ the British Museum MSS. fall into two groups² : a) eight MSS. represented by Royal 13 B. viii. (I shall denote this MS. by "R") and that printed by Colgan ("C"); β) three MSS. : Arundel 292, Harley 3846, and Cotton, Tiberius E. i. To class β also belong : (a) the Bamberg MS. ("A"); (b) the abridgment in the Chronica Majora of Matthew Paris³ ; (c) the original of the version made by Jean Belet.⁴

We have thus made accessible to us good representatives of class β in MSS. A and K, and of class a in MS. C. (That Ward is correct (p. 451) in classing A with K, and C with R, appears from a comparison of the passages which he quotes from R (pp. 446–449) with the corresponding passages in C. The two texts agree nearly word for word, while A and K show constant important variations in which they usually agree. Further: in Chap. XXI., KA employ (three times) the word abbacia, while CR just as consistently read monasterium).

Of which class, now, was the Latin MS. which lay before Marie? In the passage just referred to, Marie agrees with KA in all three cases ; she translates (ll. 1947, 1950, 1975) the word by abbëe. In general, barring cases where A has undergone reworking, we shall find that Marie has regularly followed the readings of KA as against those of C (=R). This will be sufficiently shown by the following passages :

First case : Marie=K, as against C ; A is reworked. At l. 717 Marie has : Qui a si bon purposement Mis en tun quer, . . corresponding to K's (Cap. V., l. 33) : qui in corde tuo bonum propositum misit, while C has : qui in corde tuo confirmavit propositum, and A shows reworking : qui cordi tuo tantum et tam salubre inspiravit propositum. Again, Marie (l. 884) has : Ne volt un mot parler a els, corresponding to K's (Cap. VI., l. 72) : nec vel unum verbum eis respondit, while C has : nihil penitus respondens, and A : labiis suis indicit silentium nec respondet. Again, Marie (l. 967) : Il retint bien en sun pensé Cum Deus l'aveit einz delivré, which reproduces K's (Cap. VII., l. 56 ff.) : Ille vero mente retinens qualiter alibi ab eis deus liberavit, while C has omitted the passage ; A reads : Ac ille misericordie dei non immemor.

Second case : Marie=KA, as against C. Marie (l. 708) has : Res e tundu novelement, and A (Cap. V., l. 27 ff.) : barbis nuper rasis, and K : et nuper rasi. C has nothing corresponding. Again, Marie (l. 1671) says : Li ercevesque le menerent Un poi en sus . . corresponding to KA (Cap. XVI., l. 146 ff.) : Pontifices . . ab aliis seorsum subtrahentes, while C has nothing at all answering to this clause. Again, Marie (l. 2017) : Creiez mei qui de mes oeilz vi, for which K reads (Cap. XXII., l.

15): crede saltem quod ab oculis meis vidi, and A : credo [error for crede] saltem quod oculis meis vidi, while C is much fuller : et oculis meis harum rerum non valde dissimile multique mecum conspexere.

Third case : Marie=K, as against AC. Marie (l. 970) has : Einz les despist e sis haï, as in K (Cap. VII., l. 56 ff.) : Hos omnino contempsit. The sentence is wanting in AC. Again : Marie (l. 1166) : quant il deveit avaler, for which K (Cap. XI., l. 27 ff.) : in descensione rote. . . Nothing corresponding in AC. Again, Marie (l. 1649) : Chascune aveit a grant plenté La celestiene clarté, answering to K's (Cap. XVI., l. 126 ff.) : Erant singule magnitudine lucis replete. In AC the sentence is wanting.

It follows from the foregoing that Marie translated a text which belonged to class β , and one which, as Mall had already seen,¹ stood very near to MS. K. MS. A, owing to thorough reworking which appears chiefly in the descriptions of hell and the terrestrial paradise, offers comparatively little aid in the establishment of Marie's text.

That neither A, nor yet K, can be the original from which Marie drew is sufficiently shown by the fact that K does not contain the lengthy prologue (Marie ll. 17-188) nor the Chaplain's tale of the Second Hermit (ll. 2117-2184).²

On the other hand, A omits the story of the Irish-

man (Marie ll. 215–264). Neither will Harley 3846, which, as we have seen, also belongs to class β ,¹ answer the requirements, since the account of Florentianus and all subsequent matters are not found in it (Marie ll. 2071–2296).

We can conclude, therefore, that the MS. which Marie used (which, if it exists, has not yet been made accessible to us), stood very near to B.M. Arundel 292, but differed from it in that it contained the prologue, the first homily (Marie ll. 1401–1484) in a form somewhat longer than that in A but shorter than that in R, the episode of the two abbots, and the Chaplain's tale.

It so happens that the Espurgatoire of Marie contains most of the reliable evidence which we possess as to the time in which its author lived and wrote. Before this evidence was examined, it was believed that Marie's floruit should be placed in the reign of Henry II., (1154–1189)² but according to later investigations it is more probable that her active period should be taken as just beginning about the time of the death of this king, and as continuing even into the next century. In order to place some fresh evidence in its proper connection, it will be useful to summarize here the reasons which have led to this conclusion.

² So G. Paris, Litt. Frçse au Moyen Age,² p. 248, and Warnke, Zeits. f. Rom. Phil. IV., p. 226; Lays, Introd., p. XLIII.

These are best set forth in an essay by Dr. S. Eckleben, which appeared in 1885.¹ The appearance of this essay forestalled the publication of a study on virtually the same subject by Dr. E. Mall, but the results of the independent investigations of both scholars are the same in all essential points.²

1. Jocelin of Furness, writing about 1183 at the request of Thomas, Archbishop of Armagh, in mentioning the Purgatory³ says nothing of Owein's descent, although this was said to have taken place long before, in Stephen's reign (1135-1154).⁴

2. Giraldus Cambrensis, who in 1185 accompanied Prince John ("Lackland") to Ireland, also says nothing of the descent of Owein. Giraldus being a churchman and a learned man for his day, as well as an indefatigable and somewhat credulous collector of miscellaneous information, it is very difficult to account for his silence if the Tractatus of Henry was written at this date.⁵

Mr. Ward on this point is "inclined to surmise that Giraldus had heard an inaccurate report of the present [Henry's] work, but that its popularity was not yet strong enough to impel him to name Sir Owen." It has been noted above, however, that Girald's account contains no idea of a visit in bodily person to the other world, and his ideas of the Purgatory have all the air of having been gathered from oral sources only, during his stay in Ireland, and of representing the current talk at some distance from the locality itself. It has not been noted in this connection that in treating the folk-tales current in Ireland about St. Brandan, Giraldus, after repeating the tales about the marvellous voyage of the Saint which had reached him, refers the reader for further information to the book ("libellum") which had been written on the life of St. Brandan.¹ That he would at least have mentioned so remarkable a work as Henry's, had he then known of it, can hardly be doubted.

3. Bishop Florentinus O'Cherballan, who, according to all the evidence, is the person named as such in the Tractatus (and by Marie, l. 2075) did not reach the dignity of a bishopric until 1185.²

4. Malachias (died 1148) who is twice mentioned in the Tractatus, (and by Marie, ll. 299, 2074), has always the title of "Saint," but he is not so named in the Life of him written by his friend, the great St. Bernard, nor was he formally canonized until 1189.³ Mr. Ward⁴ considers it beyond doubt that "popular opinion had pronounced him a saint long before 1190." Dr. Eckleben claims, on the other hand, that a learned monk such as Henry certainly was, would be very careful in the application of such a title.

³ Eckleben, pp. 54, 56.

⁴ Catalogue II., p. 443.

It is easy, indeed, to account for the addition of the title to Malachias' name, either as Mr. Ward has done, or by supposing that the movement towards his canonization had been begun long before and was a matter of common knowledge among the Cistercians, or finally, by ascribing the "Sanctus" to the writers of the later MSS. (the original MS. not having come down to us). It is not so easy to account for the state of affairs in Marie's Espurgatoire. The first time Malachias is named is in a passage which undoubtedly reproduces a part of the original Tractatus; the second time is in a passage which probably was added by another hand than Henry's, since it is preserved only in certain of the MSS., and these, according to Mall,¹ are not the oldest or best. The first passage in Marie reads (l. 299) :

*Ço nus mustre Malachias

and the second (l. 2074) :

Nevuz fu al tierz Seint Patriz Qui cumpainz ert Seint Malachiz.

If, now, in the first passage, "Sanctus Malachias" stood in the Latin MS. which lay before Marie, it is extremely difficult to see why she should have omitted the title, especially as she is always careful to add those of Gregory (ll. 32, 151, etc.), Augustine (l. 143), and Patrick (cp. ll. 7, 190, 302, etc. In all nine times; in 481 its omission is therefore probably an error). It would have been easy to have written Ço nus dit, etc. without material change in the sense. It is therefore extremely probable that at the first passage, Marie's original bore the name Malachias without the title and that it consequently was written before 1189. The addition of the title in the second passage, on the other hand, gives us less basis for a conclusion for the reasons given at the beginning of the preceding paragraph. It is further probable that as Marie uses a different spelling in the two passages, the identity of the names escaped her.

As far, then, as the evidence on this point can be trusted, it gives us a terminus ad quem for the composition of the Tractatus eight years earlier than that furnished by the Chronicle of Johannes Brompton (1197)¹ which mentions Henry's work, and narrows the period during which it could have been composed to the years between 1185 (composition of Giraldus' Topographia) and 1189 (canonization of Malachias).

Marie de France, as is well known, was the author of two other works,—a collection of *Lays*² and a larger collection of Fables, of which as yet we possess no critical text.³ What indications are there as to the relative order of these compositions? Mall says¹: "diese Schrift [the Espurgatoire] aus sprachlichen wie sachlichen Gründen als das älteste der erhaltenen Werke der Marie gelten muss," but unfortunately he postponed the promised publication of the basis for this conclusion. It is necessary, therefore, to see how far we may be able to supply the omission.

1. The Espurgatoire shows a grade of literary skill distinctly inferior to that displayed in both the Lays and the Fables. To be convinced of the truth of this assertion, we have but to glance at the frequent employment in the former of stereotyped phrases where the meaning gains nothing by their use. Such are: nel dutez pas (ll. 300, 734) ço li est vis (ll. 1008, 1579, 1593, etc.) c'en est la sune (ll. 54, 703, 2132) bien le sachiez (ll. 245, 1739) sanz dutance (l. 128). The repetition of whole lines is not uncommon (line 1037 recurs at 1201 and 1599; also 983 at 1225), and a certain poverty of vocabulary is observable in the not infrequent use of the same word as the rime-word of both lines of the couplet.² These characteristics are almost unknown in the Lays and Fables.

2. Marie, in the Prologue to the Lays, distinctly abandons the practice of translating tales from the Latin. She says (l. 28 ff.):

*Pur ceo començai a penser
d'alkune bone estoire faire e de Latin en Romanz traire;
mais ne me fust guaires de pris:
itant s'en sunt altre entremis.*

² For examples, see Note to l. 1369.

That is to say, as little distinction was to be won in the field of translating Latin stories, Marie turns to a more difficult task :

Des lais pensai qu' oïz aveie . . . etc.

If, as M. G. Paris thinks,¹ Marie wrote the Lays from hearing them related in her presence, to pass from the almost servile translation of the Espurgatoire, with its appendix of irrelevant tales, to such an enterprise as the composition of these Lays, is a distinct rise in grade of literary work.

3. While Marie dedicates the Lays to the king himself (Richard Cœur-de-Lion, according to Dr. Mall), and the Fables to William Longsword, an influential noble (Marie styles him “le plus vaillant de cest reialme”) in the Espurgatoire she has not yet attained to such a degree of confidence in her own powers as to venture upon making a dedication to such high personages.

4. It would be remarkable if any great differences appeared in the language of succeeding works of the same author, yet indications do not wholly fail that the Espurgatoire represents a slightly older type of speech than the Lays or Fables : a) certain fems. of Decl. II. show no s in the n. sg. verité r183² gent r1128. In the Lays the s appears in all words of this class.³ b) niënt (occurs 11 times) is always two syllables ; the Lays occasionally permit its contraction to one syllable.¹ c) rimes such as mercier : chier (Lays, Chaitivel, 27) are wanting in the Espurg.² d) final -t persists in the Espurg. in deit digitum r2047 and in s'esvanit r328, while to the Lays the consonant has been lost in both cases. The usage as to elision or retention of e from Lat. -at, furnishes no basis for a conclusion.³ Again, the frequent replacing of the nominative by the accusative is no indication of age, inasmuch as this replacing is observed in the earliest Anglo-Norman texts ; it can only be viewed as evidence of the Anglo-Norman coloring of the language.⁴

What evidence there is, therefore, goes to confirm Dr. Mall's conclusions : 1) that the Espurgatoire is the earliest of the works of Marie which are known to us ; 2) that as the Latin original of the Espurgatoire is to be referred to a date not long previous to 1189, Marie's active period could not have begun before the closing decade of the twelfth century.

II.—THE MANUSCRIPT

A SINGLE manuscript containing the Espurgatoire of Marie de France is now known to exist: Fds. frç. No. 25407 of the Bibliothèque Nationale at Paris (formerly marked. Notre-Dame 277). It is written on vellum, with two columns to the page, and evidently dates from the end of the thirteenth or the early fourteenth century.

As is well known, the text of this MS. was published nearly seventy-five years ago by B. de Roquefort.¹ Roquefort aimed only at an intelligible text and even with this uncritical aim, failed to reproduce the original in many important particulars, often through errors in transcription or in solution of abbreviations, often through mistaken emendations or failure to recognize unusual words. His scanty prefatory notice is not free from serious errors.²

The MS. contains the following pieces :

1. fo. 1a–101d. The Image du Monde of Gautier de Metz. In a different hand from that of the rest of the MS.
2. fo. 102a–122d. The Espurgatoire.
3. fo. 122d–138d. The Moralitez, a translation of the Moralium Dogma of Gautier de Lille. Begins : Talent me esteit pris ke jo recontasse. Ends : Bien ait qi co comanz fist qi le fist escrivre e qui lescrit.

¹ Poésies de Marie de France, etc., 2 vols. Paris, 1820 and 1832.

² Cp. Eckleben, p. 37.

4. fo. 139a–156d. The Romanz des Romanz.
5. fo. 157a–160d. A Credo, Paternoster and seven petitions in prose.
6. fo. 160d–172d. Prologus Regine Sibille, printed from this MS. by P. Tarbé, in his Collection des Poètes de Champagne XII., pp. 106 ff. Reims, 1851.
7. fo. 173c–196a. The Secrez des Secrez, in verse. Begins : Primes saciez ke icest tretez Est le secre de secrez numez. . . Ends : Ke le regne pussum merir Ke done a suens a sun pleisir.
8. fo. 197a–212d. The Distichs of Cato, Latin text with French translation after each paragraph. Printed from this MS. by Leroux de Lincy, Livre des Proverbes français (2nd. ed.) II., p. 439 ff., whence it is copied in Stengel's Ausgaben und Abhandlungen XLVII., p. 111. ff. Leroux de Lincy's text is not trustworthy.
9. fo. 213a–244d. The Tornoiement Antecrit of Huon de Méry, published by P. Tarbé, in his work just cited, and republished from this and six other MSS. by G. Wimmer, in Ausg. und Abhand. LXXVI., Marburg, 1888.

At the bottom of this last folio (244) are the words, in the hand of the MS., Al nun de deu qui od nus seit which is the first line of the Espurgatoire. The pages of the MS. have evidently been transposed and renumbered. There is a blank page at fo. 196cd, and the MS. may have formerly ended here ;

the Distichs of Cato and the Torn. Antecrit must then have immediately preceded the Espurg.

The MS. offers no means for the determination of its date within narrow limits. The Torn. Antecrit was written between 1234 and 1249; according to P. Meyer (Romania XV., p. 287) the Secrez des Secrez dates from the middle of the thirteenth century. The Image du Monde dates from 1245, but, as already noted, this piece, being in a different hand, may have originally formed part of another MS. From these indications, the MS. belongs to the second half of the thirteenth century (so Wimmer, op. cit., p. 2) or the beginning of the fourteenth.

Fortunately, we are able to control the writing habits of the scribe of the MS. by comparing with its original his copy of the Tornoiementz Antecrit. Of this composition, Wimmer, in the work cited, collates seven MSS., which, according to his investigations, fall into two groups deriving from α and β respectively. MS. "A" (that is, Paris B. N., f. f. 1593—one of the best MSS.) and MS. "D" (the one containing the Espurg.) derive from α ; and five others from β . It is evident that where the reading of A is the same as that of O (that is, the original text as established by collation of all the MSS.) we can assume with entire safety that this reading was the reading of α from which A was copied. But D was also copied from α , and readings of D which differ from those common to A and O, are therefore due to the scribe of D, and the character of these variants will furnish some hints as to his habits of writing, his dialect, the extent of his knowledge, etc. When, for instance, at l. 1991 of the Torn. Ant., OA (and hence a) read : C'orent Cliges et Lancelot, while D has C'orent gigles et saouselot, it is not too much to say that the scribe was ignorant of the familiar names of the Breton romances. In the same way, other characteristics of the scribe's work appear, among them the following : he was evidently a Churchman, as the theological character of the contents would first lead us to suspect. This is confirmed by the frequent church words or Latinisms which he has introduced into the text of the Torn. Ant. E. g. heresie for the erege of the other MSS. ; angles for angres ; puplican for popelican, etc. The scribe is also careless of the requirements of metre ; he frequently changes the tense, and substitutes senseless words or expressions, his attention wandering to neighboring words. Niceties of thought and expression are often lost through carelessness. Examples abound on every side and need not be quoted. They indicate with tolerable certainty that little confidence is to be placed in the readings of MS. 25407 in matters of detail, and we are therefore able to proceed to the correction of errors with a certain confidence.

The abbreviations in the MS., though numerous, are none of them unusual, and with the aid of Prou's Manual,¹ present practically no difficulty in their solution.

III.—DIALECT OF MARIE DE FRANCE

THE determination of the dialect in which Marie de France wrote has been made to turn upon the question whether her language shows the development of o (=Lat. free ō, ū) into the diphthong ou. The presence of this diphthong in Marie's speech,—a diphthong which, as is well known, is a specifically French, as distinguished from Franco-Norman and Anglo-Norman characteristic¹—has been affirmed by Prof. H. Suchier in his recently published Altfranzösische Grammatik.² Upon the basis of this conclusion he has removed Marie from among the Franco-Norman writers with whom she had been classed previously,³ and has placed her among the French writers.

Judged by the other tests of French as different from Franco-Norman, namely (1) the mixture of -en- and -an-;⁴ (2) the absorption of the Imperfect -abat by the -ebat terminations⁵; (3) the change of ei to oi,⁶—Marie is distinctly a Franco-Norman

² Halle, 1893. Theil I. Die Schriftsprache, pp. 2 and 29.

writer, since all these phenomena are unknown to her language. It is thus apparent that Prof. Suchier's belief (so far as made public) rests solely upon the evidence in favor of the existence of the diphthong ou in her language. For the discussion which follows, new material has been collected and the attempt has been made to examine this evidence more closely than has been done heretofore.

Marie in the Lays (Lanval 339) rimes suls (sölus) with -us (-ösus) and in the Fables (No. 82, 11) the same suffix -ösus occurs in rime with the word answering to Latin lūpus. It is Prof. Suchier's view, if I have correctly understood it, that first in suls (phonetic squs) and secondly in lous lūpus (and also in dous dūös) the diphthong ou is certain, and hence for the suffix -ösus, -qus is assured, and the diphthong ou must be allowed for Marie. That -ösus in four cases rimes with the atonic pronoun vus (vös), in which, for this period, the diphthongization would be unheard of, necessitates the conclusion¹ that Marie wrote now -us (= -qs) now -qus; and, in other words, employed a double orthography according as the exigencies of rime impelled her.

It will be useful to have before us a complete list of the rimes in question. They are:

a) in the Lays: -us (-ösus) : cus (cūcus) Guig. 215 : vus Guig. 343, 501; Dous Amanz 95 : suls Guig. 393; Lanval 339.

b) in the Fables: -us : lus (lūpus) 2, 5 82, 7² 82, ¹ See the Altfr. Gram. I., p. 30.

11 :dous 5,7. Lus :dous 4,11 79,9 :suls 42,3 56,1.
Nus :dous 56,53. Bus :vus 94,29 and 59.

c) in the Espurgatoire : -us :vus 1895.

Did the diphthong ou exist in Marie's word answering to Latin sōlus? Fortunately, material does not wholly fail us for the answer to this question.

1. O+L+dental. Marie, in the Espurg. (l. 1207) places genuz (genūculos*) and tuz (tūtōs*) in rime. As the diphthong ou in tuz is, at this period, not to be thought of, we see from this rime that not only had the palatal quality of the l been lost at this time before the s (z) of flexion, but also that l, in Marie's time, was vocalized to u between u (= o) and a dental stop-sound, and then had united with the preceding u to form a single vowel. That such a union is to the highest extent reasonable, appears from the character of the articulations of the two sounds. Meyer-Lübke says¹: "Pour l'émission de l [velar or "barred" l] la racine de la langue occupe la même position que pour l'émission de u: le premier phonème ne se distingue du second que par l'occlusion que forme la pointe de la langue . . ." It will be readily seen that in the word genuz, and in any similar phonetic group, the point of the tongue, after the articulation of u, has still to make a closure in order to articulate z (= ts); so that all the essential features of velar l are here present in the preceding vowel and the following consonant. In such a position, it is obvious that the l could with difficulty persist, and in Marie's time it evidently had been absorbed into the contiguous articulations and had entirely disappeared from pronunciation.

Virtually the same phonetic group is found in suls (sōlus), so that for this word we are justified in believing the pronunciation to have been sys, and that in rimes of this word with -us (-ōsus) the rime was exact. That the word (to my knowledge) is never so written, may be explained by the desire to avoid confusion with sus (susum).

The comparative rarity of the occurrence of ql+consonant in the Old French vocabulary, will explain the scarcity of rimes of this sort in Marie and in other authors of the period ; but that the same contraction of ql+dental into single q also holds good for Marie's contemporary, Benoît de Sainte-More, is placed beyond reasonable doubt by the following rimes from the *Roman de Troie*¹: sols (sōlus) : nos 417, 3951 : vos 1437, 12863 : -os (-osus) 14101, 19171, 21023 dolz : toz 20719. And from the Chronique des Ducs de Normandie :- temute (tumūltum) : gute 19704.

II. dūōs. How did Marie pronounce the French word answering to Latin duos? It rimes with -osus (Fables 5,7), and with nus (Fables 56,53). The latter rime points strongly toward a phonetic dys. Böhmer² has arranged most of the material from the older monuments in regard to this word. His inquiry culminates in the sentence: "Die Verfasser der o-u Denkmäler sprachen gewiss dys." It is my belief that we have in this word a literary orthography dous by the side of a pronunciation dus—dōs belonging to the folk-speech. If this view be correct, it would be strange if the orthography dus—dos failed to appear in texts which show folk-speech influences. Dos, in effect, appears in rime with vos, in Chrestien de Troyes' Erec and Enide.¹ This poem is distinguished from the other works of Chrestien by its free admission of popular and dialectic elements.² Elsewhere the orthography dus, dos is not rare. Knösel³ has collected a considerable number of examples from which I quote the MS. of the Roman de Troie, edited by Joly. (ll. 9764 and 26780).⁴

These facts support the conception of a Folk-Latin dōs, which appears in the Passion as dos (71 b c) parallel with sūōs—sos (1 c, 11 d) and tūōs—tos (14 b, 16 a), and which, in the West, exhibits the same development as the suffix -ōsus. This was evidently the view of Schwan,⁵ who wrote dōs as the Folk-Latin etymon.

A phonetic dōs is likewise to be ascribed to Benoit. Cp. Roman de Troie :- dos : vos 12729, 18247 : resplen- dors 14581 :rescos 6395 :-os (-osus) 5529, 6089, etc. (13 times).

Whence, then, the orthography (dous) of most of the older monuments? Böhmer suggests that dous was written to avoid confusion with dus (dux), dos (dorsum), and deus (Deus). As more motives than one may lie behind such a phenomenon, it is to be noted that this numeral seems peculiarly susceptible to Latinization.¹ The Vie de St. Léger shows duos (20e and 2b) and duaes (106a). According to Gröber², the Old Italian duo, dua, duoi are Latinisms. There is then some ground to believe that the Old French forms uns, dous, treis may have been modelled closely upon the Latin unus, duo(s), tres.

III. lūpus. This word rimes in Marie as follows : with -osus, Fables 2,5 82,7 82,11 :duos 4,11 79,9 :solus 42,3 56,1.

Here I must have recourse to the readings of the MSS. of Marie's works, inasmuch as the phonetic history of the word has not yet been made entirely clear. First, however, should be remarked the appearance of lōs in rime with nos in Chrestien's Eric and Enide, l. 4412 :ros Yvain 301, and in Benoit's Roman de Troie in rime with -osus ll. 9105, 21077.³

¹ This tendency reappears later in the forms of other numerals. Cp. cinq, six, sept, vingt, etc.

² Archiv für Latein. Lexicog. II., p. 107.

For lus we have the readings of the Harley and York MSS. of the Fables (the Cambridge MS. has lous) in all cases the word appears; so also in Cotton Vespasian B. xiv. to Fables 2,5 and 56,1. Lus, again, is the reading of the London Brandan l. 1282, of the Roland l. 1751 (ed. Müller). I look upon lus, therefore, as the regular western form, corresponding to the eastern lous—leus.

IV. cūcus, būcus*, (jūgum). As stated above, *cūcus*¹ occurs in rime with -ōsus (MS. cous) in the Lays, Guig. 216; būcus* (modern French *bouc*²) in rime with vus, Fables 94,29 and 59. The rarity of the appearance of these words presents an obstacle to the determination of their Norman forms; but that the true Franco-Norman development demands (in the n.sg.) cus, bus is shown by the (in all respects dence. The Roman de Troie shows 12 cases of -osus in rime with nos; 22 cases in rime with vos. Also -os : ros 5449. : rescos 8511, 8767, 15641, 21481, 23463, 26190. : tros 8833.

The orthography of the MS. edited by Joly is remarkably rich in variations. For -osus occur: -os, -ous, -ox, -ols, -eus, -eos. -eus (-osus): -eus (illos) 12273, 28569, if genuine readings, are doubtless an importation from the East.

¹ I am aware that the derivation of O. Fr. cous from cucus (= cugus Du Cange) has as yet not been demonstrated, though affirmed by Ménage, Littré, and others. It is doubted by G. Paris (Romania XIV., p. 602 ff.) and by Tobler (Zeits. f. R. P. X., p. 164). I expect to publish before long a study of these Latin substantives in -cus (-gus) in French, which, I trust, will put this etymology beyond dispute.

² Cp. Mackel, Die Germanischen Elemente, etc., p. 21.

parallel) development of jügum, which appears as jus, ju in the Four Books of the Kings (juh in the Montébourg Psalter.)¹

To resume briefly, sufficient evidence has been brought forward to show that the Franco-Norman (and Anglo-Norman) forms of the words treated are phonetic sus (written suls), phonetic dus (written dous) lus, cus, bus, jus, which correspond to the eastern forms sous—seus, dous—deus, etc., and which, because they have the same vowel quality as y (=Latin free ō, ū) are freely placed by Marie in rime with the same.

From this it follows that neither Marie nor Benoit (in the Roman de Troie) know the diphthong ou from free Latin ō, ū, nor in their words answering to Latin dūōs, lūpus, cūcus, būcus*, jūgum. The dialect in which Marie de France wrote, therefore, was not French, but Franco-Norman.

IV.

LANGUAGE OF THE ESPURGATOIRE

MARIE's language has undergone some careful investigation at the hands of Dr. Warnke in his article "Ueber die Zeit der Marie de France,"¹ as well as in the Introduction to his edition of the Lays. In the first mentioned work only has use been made of material from the Espurgatoire, and a number of questions as to specific traits of the language which Marie employed, have remained unsettled. With a few exceptions, only material which is either omitted or incompletely treated by the editor of the Lays will be brought forward in the following pages.

A. HIATUS, CONTRACTION, ELISION.

Hiatus. In thirteen cases the MS. shows hiatus with final atonic e. In four of these (472, 1242, 1272, 1410) obvious corrections are to be made which relieve the hiatus. In l. 434 the copyist has avoided hiatus by adding an s in costumes (n. sg.). For Marie, however, the word is a feminine of Decl. I. (cp. 472, 566). The consonant groups preceding the e in hiatus are: 1) mute+liquid (receivre 226 oeuvre 518 vivre 1430 estre 1725 prestre 2296); 2) single consonants (hume 238, 2069 custume 434 parface 720).

In only one case does the Espurg. permit hiatus of e from Latin -at in the Indic. and Sbj. pres. 3, viz.,

¹ In Zeits. f. Rom. Phil. IV., p. 223 ff. Dr. Warnke, unfortunately, was compelled to use the Roquefort edition of the Espurg., which, as we have seen, is quite untrustworthy. More than once it led him into basing conclusions upon false readings. E.g. ll. 1104 (p. 246), 1054 (p. 247), 1991 (p. 237) and 472.

720 : Parface il par sa bunté. In all other cases the e is lost : 614, 1445, 1816, 1859, 1860, 1894, 2281. Warnke, in his discussion of this subject,¹ apparently overlooked this line, and with consequently defective material drew the conclusion that the (supposed) consistent elision of e (-at) in the Espurg. indicates a date of composition later than that of the Lays, where such hiatus is allowed 19 times. In view of the line just quoted, and of the scarcity of examples of both kinds in the Espurg., it is manifestly not permissible to draw such a conclusion.

Contraction. As in the Lays,² the metre gives us a sure indication that Marie's language did not permit the contraction to a diphthong or single vowel of two vowels originally in Latin hiatus or separated by a consonant. Cp. : -iün -ionem precüus 1495 pecheür 762 armeüre 804 diënt 173 grail 1096 bruür 898 poür 547 rounde 305 beneëigun 785 aage 260 veü 73 peüst 1602 beneëiz 1679 etc.

The MS., however, shows the contraction frequently : juner 578 espenür 531, 613, etc. rancun 728 purseir 298 beneit 1567 pust 528 dust 104 benesquirent 1652.³

It is convenient to add here what is to be said of the use of or, ore and cum, cume, etc. The MS. shows ore before consonant initial five times. In two of these (1312, 1965) it represents two syllables. In the other three cases (655, 1667, 1841) it counts as one syllable, and following the more carefully written MSS. of the Lays,⁴ I have substituted or.

As uncor stands before consonant initial 2181, the same form has been written 61, 291, where the metre demands only two syllables (MS. uncore). On the contrary, the e is necessary to the metre in encore 1369.

³ Burguy, Gram. de la Langue d'Oïl I., p. 322, reproduces Roquefort's false reading of this line.

⁴ Cp. Introd., p. xxvi.

Cum and cume both occur frequently before consonant initial. In eight cases (638, 1047, 1233, 1577, 1620, 1630, 1706, 2224) e is necessary to the metre ; in twenty cases e has no worth (4, 126, 327, etc.). Two cases remain doubtful : 421, 566.—el for ele 2235.

Elision. As to elision before vocalic initials in ne (nec), que, si se (si), the Espurg. stands upon the same ground as the *Lays*¹, elision being optional : ne 1418 ; n' 22, 816, 1110, etc.—que 100, 282, 458, 912, etc. ; qu' 284, 289, 307, etc.—si 238, 240, 1835 ; s' 959, 1138, 1847, etc.

Jo. As in the Lays, the elision of jo also is optional ; the Espurg., however, shows only one case (2287) where the word retains its syllabic value. For elision, cp. 15, 26, 185, etc. Interesting is 2063 ; E puis parlai j'a dous abbez. G. Paris² has quoted another case of this elision ; cp. also : apelent l'hume for li hume l'apelent in the Computus of Philippe de Thaün³, and two similar cases in the Lays, where elision is not permitted.⁴

Ço. Elision of this pronoun is optional. Cp. ço est 242, 1805, 2144 ço iert 1788 ço oï (pret. 3) 2001 ; but c'est 108, 807, 1690, etc. c'ert 248 c'en 53, 703, 2132 c'esteit 2082. More unusual are : en c'esteient 484 pur c'eslirai 535 de ç'aveie 2171 and ç'aveient 483.

si (sic) shows elision before il 2040 (unless we have here the enclitic use of neuter le as in 13, 782, 1912). Otherwise si appears before vocalic initial : 746, 1043, 1167, 1134, etc.

en (inde) loses its vowel after qui : 296, 1114.

quei before vocalic initial shows elision in 1180 : Purqu'il tarjout li demanderent. Likewise 790: Par qu'a Deu puisse l'alme rendre; the transposition Par quei puisse a Deu, etc., is, however, easy. Cp. l. 614.¹

li n. sg. of the article, shows optional elision : li abes 1941 li altre 2124 li airs 1391 li evesques 541, 549, 2117, 2123 li us 354 li uns 713, 2067, 2204. But l'evesques 440, 515, 525, 559. li escriz 421 remains doubtful.

li (n. pl. of the article) is never elided : - 845, 972, 1083, 1203, 1791, etc.—li (dat. sg. of the pers. pron.) may lose its vowel : l'en 2080. Apparently in l'oît 526.²

For supposed elision of qui, see Pronouns.

For the enclitic use of le and les 1) as article with a, de, and en, and 2) as pronoun with ne, qui, si and jo, the Espurg. shows no important difference from the usage of the Lays.³ ne se remains uncontracted 90, 880, 1359, 1416, as is the custom in the Lays,⁴ and in the Computus.⁵

B. VOWELS.

a. The nasals -an- and -en- are not rimed. Of words which, on account of mixing of suffix, vary between -ant and -ent, the Espurg. offers : aparissanz r82 ardanz r1008 covenant r2282 mananz r2125

¹ Warnke, Lays, Introd., p. xxvii., in discussing an exactly similar case, has evidently missed the two examples just given, and his expression "derartige Erscheinungen sich bei Marie sonst nicht finden" is therefore to be modified.

ē. -éria : the regular development appears in matire (: dire 1492). miseire miseria 1710 is learned. Since -eals -ellus is assured by rime for Marie,¹ I have restored this reading consistently : 1673, 1891, 2124.

The Espurg. shows no cases of mixing in rime of short e with long ɛ or with ē. In estencēles (: novēles 1269) the suffix -ella has replaced the proper Latin ending (scintilla).²

Short ɛ and ē before nasals, however, form for Marie, as for other authors of the period, an exception to this rule, both being represented by nasal ɛ̃ : Cp. venz ventum : enz intus 1049 suvent : gent 1998, 2115 turmenz : dedenz 1071 purpens : tens 2203.

remist remansit 329, 787, etc., and remistrent 604 appear for remest remestrent.³ An Anglo-Norman trait is ie for e in piere patres 16,401 and in siet sapit 545. —For -ier for iër, see under ie.

o. appears for o as usual in the learned words gloire (: memoire 772) victoire (: gloire 1568) Espurgatoire (: gloire 1641).

o. Before oral consonants, the MS. presents the greatest inconsistency in the representation of o (Lat. ō, ŭ, in tonic, as well as in atonic, position. Words frequently occur here with o, there with u, and again with ou (the last is comparatively rare). This mixture of forms especially characterizes the latter half of the text (from about l. 1087 on). In the first half, o is of quite rare occurrence for tonic o; in the second half, the proportion of o to u is nearly one-half.

If we seek the explanation of these facts, we are at once led to ascribe the writing o (and ou) to a French copyist who has substituted (inconsistently) his native forms for those of his copy. The verbal endings -ons, -ont, for instance, become the rule in the second half of the text, and here also occur the French Impf. endings -oît, -oient, as well as the writing ou.

As further evidence of a general substitution of o for u, may be adduced a number of words in which o has been made to replace a u which is not u (=o) but ü (Lat. ū):- corioseté 1429 plosurs 1647 chascon 1198, 1743, 1813 chascone 1197, and, vice versa, u is written where only o can stand in puür pavorem 1273.¹

1. u appears for o (Lat. ō, ŭ) in tonic free and checked position, as well before oral and nasal con-

¹ It may be a question here whether the forms like chascon may have been introduced by Anglo-Norman copyists to whom ü (Lat. ū) has the same value as u (=Lat. ō, ŭ) Cp. Suchier, Altfrz. Gram. I., p. 12.c. Chescon, for example, is a frequent reading of the Lincoln MS. of the Computus: 1098, 1104, 2912, etc. Such a question does not admit of certain decision; yet, in view of the fact that all these forms occur in that part of the MS. where o for u is most frequent, and that the opposite confusion occurs (puür for poür), it seems more probable that we are dealing with a simple oversight of the copyist. Inconsistent substitution is no doubt likewise responsible for rimes like sume: prodome 53, and cp. 1279, 1717.

hure 1831 aillurs 143 curt cūrtum r932 munt mündum r825 munde (adj.) 2302 etc.

2. u for pretonic o has survived the general suppression of u in the MS. with sufficient frequency for us to believe that it represents Marie's usage : aürer adōrare 2200 buterent 891 nurice 2223 duter 20 reduta 649 duñance 128 custus 129 custume 434, 472, 566 returner 1289 furmage 2158 mustrer 7, 73, 123, 164, 210, etc. mustrance 173 mustier 668 plurer 1016, 1859 sermunant 32 parfundesce 2048 purveü 2211 purpos 719 etc. On the contrary, o only in soleil 926, 931, 1522, 1577, 1821 and in solunc 59, 68, etc. (selunc 1726, 1778). Following the tendency to write o before and after v, u is of rare occurrence : covint 924 covent 1603 nevoz 2073 voiz 408, etc. coveitent 93 estoveit 1392 sovent 205, etc. descovrir 30 ; but grevus 130 estuvra 726 avuns vus, etc. On the basis of these latter readings, I have not hesitated in reading u in all these cases (except voiz).

3. u further appears for Latin ō before nasals, in both tonic and pretonic position : munt mōntem r1224 munter 1780 cunta 224 cunte 91 um homo r505 sun sōnum (: maisun 835) dun dōnum r296 lung 867 respunt r1245 punt pontem 79 escunsé 146 cuntenir 725 huntus (Germanic au) 1874. The MS. shows only bon, bone (but bunté 720).

4. More uncertain are those cases where in Norman texts u appears in pretonic position before oral consonants for Latin ō. Of these, the Espurg. shows a few examples : demurer 316, 577. (Cp. 497, 846 ; demuerent 142) turment, turmenter 57, 74, 115, etc. surt (: curt cūrtum 931) exōrtit*? espruver 436. On the contrary, only o is found in morir 419, 1995, 1975 obliēr 606, 780 obli 2056 soleit 2217 trover 141, 310, 2071, etc. devorouent 998 novele 674 ovraigne 623 cvrer 59, 622, etc.

It is to be noted that in the last five cases, besides the tendency of the copyist to replace u by o, the custom of allowing only o to stand before and after v may have influenced the forms. This of course lends an additional uncertainty, and, such being the case, they have remained as found in the MS.

ou in clou clavum out habuit (36 times ; ot 1304) -out, -ouent -abat, -abant (but -oënt 1018) sout sapuit pout potuit (pot 1174, 2041) (porent 603, 1645) (orent 11 times).

It is noteworthy that the MS., with one exception, shows -out by the side of orent (not ourent) and porent (not pourent). The same state of affairs is met with in the Lays, and, while it may well be a question whether in ot, pot, -oënt we may not have traces of an older speech stratum nearly obliterated by later copyists, no study of these forms has as yet been made which might furnish us secure basis for differentiation.

au occurs : 1) in the learned word autor 1401, and 2) in words with a+vocalized l. (See below under Consonants.)

iu in riulez regulatos liu lōcum ciu caecum Juiu Judaei. The last word appears only as ieu (: liu 1916) for which I have written Juiu, since both the Lays and the Espurg. have only liu. The form substituted, according to Suchier,¹ is known in French as well as Anglo-Norman texts.²

ei for ai is especially frequent and is no doubt due to Anglo-Norman¹ copyist(s) : eir aerem 1391 eit habeat meis magis neist nascit paleis 687, 695 vereiment 1608 treiz 85 treistrent 1175 meistre 2106 peist pascit peisable 1662 etc.

Before nasals, ai and ei have for Marie the same value : cp. certeins : meins minus 111 plein : mein manum 287, 1211 esteint : remeint remanet 906.³

Of words which in other texts hesitate between ie and e, we have aprimier (: chevalier 1275) pilier 689 pitié 813, 1052 (pité 669).

There are no cases of mixing ie and e in rime, though each sound rimes with itself very often.

Marie's language had already come under the influence which caused the development of long e (=Lat. tonic a) into ie immediately after an i. Cp. preiere : chiere 23 : ariere 492 acomuniez : pechiez 313 : segniez 468 esmaiez : pechiez 522 lier : cloufichier 1063 chastier : mustier 1469 celestiel : ciel 1811 otrier : chevalier 2015.

The Espurg. offers no case of this *i*³ in words where t(d) has fallen; all the examples show the single e: obliēz : apelez 779 : hastez 1297 criērent : menerent 919.

The Anglo-Norman reduction of ie to e is very ¹ saveer 942, 1022 does not indicate any phonetic change; the word in both cases has been reformed on the rime-word veer; so maneeir : veeir 1700 and eisseuz : veuz 982.

C. CONSONANTS.

1. QU, GU. As to qui, ki and que, ke, the MS. shows peculiarities which are not easy to explain: 1) qui is written 150 times (65 of which are initial to the line) and ki only ten times (4 initial). 2) ke, on the contrary, far outnumbers que: 251 cases of ke (62 initial) to 87 of que (63 initial). This is in direct opposition to the usage in the Lincoln MS. of the Computus, and, so far as it goes, agrees but ill with the conclusion of Mall (followed by Warnke) that the u, at this period, was already silent in qui but not in que, qua.¹ Inasmuch as it is the tendency for changes in orthography to lag behind phonetic changes, it seems to me that we are more likely to reproduce Marie's orthography by writing qui and que, while still leaving open the question of pronunciation.

The MS. shows a further peculiarity in that que belongs almost exclusively to the second half of the poem. The proportion of ke to que in ll. 1-1052 is as 50 to 1; in ll. 1070 to end, it is as 1 to 5. As noted above, it is the second half of the text which shows the continual substitution of o for u and que, therefore, may likewise be due to the last copyist.

qu- stands also for Latin c in quer cōr (8 times; cor 1004) quisse coxa 1207 quidier (7 times; but cuidout 1601) qui cui (4 times).

In qua-, gua- the u is mostly kept: quant quant but always kar; guarder (9 times) but garder 145, 291, etc. guarniz 798 but garniz 330, 1644.

2. L. Vocalization of l has taken place in genuz (: tuz 1207) and hence by inference in duz dulcus* 1508, 1559 suls 818, 1306 mult 31, 191, etc. The MS. often preserves l after u when it stands at the end of a pretonic syllable: sulphre 1081 dulçur 767, 1300, 1592 culchié 985 ultre 1699, and here it should not be repressed. So after a: salvez 1782 salmes 2190 palmes 1533, 1632 malvais 634, 748, 2278, and in inflected words like mals, metals, beals, etc., where the flexionless accus. sg. and n. pl. have apparently protected the l from vocalization. No warrant, however, exists in this MS. to suppose that l was not vocalized in faus, saut, chaut, haut, faut, etc., which offer a phonetic parallel to genuz, duz, etc. Otherwise the MS. uniformly preserves the l: volt, tolt els, cels cunseilz, soleilz tels, quels, pels vueli, oeilz, vielz, mielz, etc.

l is crowded out between i (ī) and the s (z) of flexion: cp. numbriz : piz 1206 and hence, by inference, in gentilz 1590 and perilz 1351, 1394. In view of the close similarity of the articulations, it is more probable that nus (nullus) 1354, 1358 is the phonetically correct form, and not nuls 349, 1043, etc.

3. n has disappeared in jur (:seignur 332 :luur 1577) and hence, by inference, in other words of the same class : enfer 133 yver 932 (yvern 686) and char carnem 1709, 2013.

Final n and final m have the same value : nun nomen : *prozdu*m 505, by the side of nun : *raisu*n 189 mentun : *trovu*m 1087.¹

4. s. That s before t was still pronounced is indicated (negatively) by the entire absence of rimes such as set : remest or dist : vit, etc., and (positively) by the rimes Christ : dist 247 : mist 382 : aprist 807 : fremist 879 : icist 420.

The MS. shows traces of the tendency of s to become silent before 1) m, n :- blama 517, 2201 almones 1444 (but almosne 1464) meimes 1769, 2071 (but meismes 2039) demesure 308, 1361 (des- 2046); 2) before f : defermeient 474 (des- 591) efreie 671, but esforcerunt 896. Whether s originally stood in hidus 837, 886, etc., is uncertain.

s and z final are not mixed in rime. s for z in ces 1407, 1729, etc. nos 596, etc. suspris 1893 prosdom 9.

5. t. The orthographies fud, ad (fut 1695 and -at in the Future 3 and Pret. 3 of Conjg. I.) are common in the MS., yet the rime shows that the t(d) was no longer pronounced : fu : Jhesu 1032, 1168 la : greva 2090. The final t of the perfects in -it for the most part is lost : cp. oi : issi 2001 fini : obli 2055 departi : demi 1984 senti : merci 899 rendi : di 380, etc., but the older form appears in s'esvanit : dit 328.

To those words in which for Marie final t persisted in pronunciation (escrit, dit, tut, respit, vit, freit, etc.) the Espurg. adds deit digitum (: atendreit 2047). The

Lays, on the contrary, have dei only (:sei se Eliduc 409 :mei Eliduc 429).

6. CONSONANTS+s. While the A.-N. writings (chaitifs vifs, blancs, becs, etc.) are frequent in the MS., the rimes show that such stop-sounds had been lost before the s:- gas :pas 442 amis :païs 464 enemis :pris 801 vis vivus :empriis 1060 chaitis :païs 1706. To these are to be added numbriz (:piz 1206) periz, etc., and probably nus nullus (see above under l).

7. In a few cases, the ts sound before u is denoted by the insertion of an e : recut 220, 256, but recut is more common : 568, 583, 1826 decut 814 recurrent 1558.

8. w appears in eve aqua 79, 418, etc. waste 915 (translating vastam in Latin CK ; cp. gastez 303) wandiches (?) 690.

9. As to the palatal g-sound before a, o, u, it is noteworthy that the MS. nowhere writes j(i) before a (except where it is etymological : ja jam) :- alegast 1474 charga 255 changa 1932 mangast 2180 serganz 1981, 2202. The two letters were no doubt interchangeable in certain positions: cp. plungier 1219, but plunjouent 1258 tarjout 1180 jetez 2220 getez 1692 ; gesant 990 but jut, jurent 2025, 1039. Following Mall¹ and Warnke,² I have written j before a as well as o and u, although it is possible that some writers may not have made the distinction, any more than for lieur (c=k) by the side of dulcur (c=ts) as in this text.

D. SUBSTANTIVES.

1. The fems. of Decl. II. mostly show s in the n. sg. Cp. ardurs :jurs 1335 colurs :lours (acc. pl.) 1625 diversetez :trovez 987 mansiuns :serruns

Computus, Introd., p. 94.

² s, Introd., p. xlix. 24.

1279, but the older declension appears in verité (:mustre) 183 gent r1128. It cannot, therefore, be determined with certainty whether poür 547 mort 109 chartre 135 had received the s of flexion; the last word occurs already in the inflected form in the Reimpreidigt 104f.

2. Masculines of the II. Decl. have no s in the n. or voc. sg. Cp. maistre r2255, 2154, etc. frere 411, 1868 nostre 1812 altre 2128. livre is therefore to be read for livres 4, 806. Abes has kept its s: 1935, 1941. The infinitive estre used substantively shows an s:- estres :terrestres 1689. Cp. also 1633, 1973, 2065.—Masculines of the III. Decl. show no s in the n. sg.: ber :mustrer 191 :entrer 1524 prestre :estre (verb) 2210 sire :dire 615.

The Espurg. offers only one certain case of the employ of a substantive in the accusative for the nominative, viz. 1412 Tels sunt . . . les mals (:enfermals). Such cases are frequent in the Computus, e. g. 478 Furent truvet li nuns, the article retaining its nom. form.¹

E. ADJECTIVES.

Adjectives of two endings show no analogical feminines in e. grieve 536, on account of the metre is to be replaced by grevuse; for the same reason, ardante 1123 and cruellement 1083, 1215 cannot stand. fole 201 dulce 24 and comunement 1607, as is well known, make no exception to this rule, since the Folk-Latin had already transferred them to the class of adjectives of three terminations.²

tels, quels appear for both genders. The MS. has tele 823, 2155, but the metre shows the reading false, and hence tele should be replaced by itels 1539 where the metre gives no indication. quele 830 is likewise to be suppressed. Cp. 1422, 1799, 1926.

*veraiment*¹ 181, 944, 1720 is also corrected by the metre. vereiment 1608 stands for veirement.

F. PRONOUNS.

Jo, co are the readings of the MS. in all cases except Joe 2297. The latter orthography appears to be common in A.-N. MSS.: e. g., in the Old French version of Henry's Tractatus in Brit. Mus. Cotton Domitian A. iv.,² and coe in MS. C. of the Computus 89, 104 (which has also co 415 and ceo 1650, 1681).

Atonic li (dative sg. masc. and fem.) is mostly replaced in the MS. by the tonic lui; but the original form is preserved at times, e. g. 302, 1937. Vice versa, li for lui 218.

The reflexive pronoun se, sei may stand before or after the verb: Cp. esmerveilla sei 702, 1880, by the side of s'esmerveilla 693, 698.

For the other pronouns, cil, cist, etc. the forms in the Espurg. are the same as those in the Lays.³

In four cases (1183, 1338, 1546, 2008) it seems necessary to admit either that the nom. qui is subject to elision before vowels, or that que has replaced qui in the nom. of the relative pronoun. The latter alternative is preferred by Tobler⁴ and by Mall.⁵ This peculiarity of usage is unknown to the Lays.⁶

The neuter que appears in the nom. 78, 610, 1660, 1865, 2236.

G. VERBS.

In the verbal forms, the Espurg. shows close agreement with the language of the Lays, and there is consequently little to remark under this head except in way of addition to Warnke's treatment of the subject.¹

1. Personal endings. The first person pl. termination is -um -uns. Cp. mentun : trovum 1087 nun : savum 781 espurgaciun : avum 1726 processiun : recevum 1745 gumfanuns : trovuns 1533.

The 2d pers. pl. is -ez (or -iez) not -eiz -ētis. Cp. devez : assez 630 avez : beneürez 412 menez : sentez (-etis for -itis) 777 entrez : irrez 1846 etc.

2. Infinitive. Noteworthy are the double forms deecivre 2113 and deceveir r1527.

3. Indic. Present. Verbs of the I. Conjg. show no in the first person sg. :- desir : venir 17 pri : merci 252 afi : respundi 612.

Pres. 4 of dire is diüns 1469 (not dimes or disuns).

Double forms appear in the Pres. 3 of aller :- va 676 and vait (: fait) 2286.

4. Subj. Present. There is as yet no e in the 3d pers. sg. of Conjg. I. :- eimt 815 recleimt 816 guart 721 enveit r2.

5. Imperfect. The few cases where -oit, -oient appear in the Impf. (1202, 1213, 1214, 1271, 1329, 1497) are to be ascribed to the last copyist. Cp. *Torn. Ant.*² 1648 portoit doner for the por tot doner of his copy (=OA) and estoit 1575 for est OA. A single case of the -ot, -oient flexion appears in flaeloent 1018, and -out, -ouent are the usual forms (1305, 1306, 1802 ; 1155, 1257, etc). The -ot, -oient forms are frequent in the Lays and in the MSS. of the Fables, and the question confronts us : is the one flexion Franco-Norman and the other Anglo-Norman? (since for this MS. and the Harley MS. of the Lays and Fables it can only be a question between these two varieties of literary speech). Warnke has cut the knot easily enough by regarding them as phonetically equivalent (Cp. s'esforçouent : portoënt, Dous Amanz 51) and the possibility of a double orthography is, of course, to be considered. The sporadic appearance of the -ot forms in this MS., having all the air of older forms which have survived the substitutions of later copyists, and the fact that -out, -ouent are assured for several Anglo-Norman MSS. by the writing -owe,¹ provoke the suspicion that in Marie's time there may have been a difference in the use of these forms on the part of English and Continental writers.

6. Future. The MS., as a rule, preserves the popular forms,² except that rr has been reduced to r :- enterai 538, 612 enterez 622 (entrez, 3 syllables, 620) entereient 488 musterunt 735 musteruns 1142, 1324 sufferunt 40 sufferez 958. Mener in the fut. mostly shows assimilation : merruns 963, 1323, 740, 865 ; remenruns 1371 and menra 1898 are doubtless later formations. Double forms in larras 728 lerruns 732.

7. Subj. Imperfect. Noteworthy are the double forms peüst 1602, 2134 peüssent 897 and pois 1681 poïst (: mansist 1835) poïssent 1385.—aidiüssins 1456 finds a parallel in trovissiez Lays, Equitan 196.³

8. Participles. First may be noted the double forms beneëiz 1679, etc., and beneëscuz 468.⁴

² Cp. Suchier, Reimpredigt, p. xxx. 49.

³ Cp. Suchier in Gröber's Grundriss I., p. 611.

⁴ This participle is not quoted by Schwan, Altfr. Gram. 2 § 530.

a) To discuss the agreement of predicate participles, it will be found convenient to look first into the usage of the Espurg. in regard to the agreement of participles with preceding and subsequent accusatives, since in several cases it is a choice between the non-observance of one or the other rule. For example in 451, Quant esteient a lui venuz, E il les avreit receüz, shall we consider that the acc. has replaced the nom. in predicate participles (venuz) or that participles fail to agree with a preceding accusative (receüz)?

1) Preceding Accus. The Lays show no cases of non-agreement, and the Espurg. has 15 cases of agreement (8 assured by rime) to three of non-agreement (184, 1200, 1686). In all of these exceptions, however, there is a general or neuter sense in the accusatives, and since other examples fail (152 the sense warrants livre for livres) we may say that except when the preceding accusative was one of general or neuter signification, the Espurg. observes the rule of agreement (including fait r108).

2) Following Accus. With a following accusative, the participle may or may not agree, as in the Lays. For agreement, cp. 935, 1185 (hence oiz 254 is justified). For non-agreement, cp. 822, 907, 1669, 2139.

b) We have just seen that there is good reason to admit non-agreement of predicate pteps. in l. 451 (the same case 1310.) How far does the Espurg. permit this non-agreement? With the pred. adj. or ptep. in the nom. sg., there are no failures to agree: cp. r522, r528, r648, etc. When the subject contains a general (neuter) idea, the usual exception to this rule appears: - 59 solunc ço qu'eles unt ovré, Lur ert iluec guereduné; so 543, 1661, and cp. 676.¹

With the pred. adj. or ptcp. in the n. pl., a continual hesitation between the inflected and uninflected forms is observed. 1) Adjectives. The forms without s stand 848 sunt enclin :fin 932 li jur sunt curt :surt. So 1368. The inflected form appears: 111 nus sumes certains : meins (minus) 122 serrunt sals :mals 1011 erent ententis :chaitis (acc. pl.) 2) Present Ptcps. The nom. stands r990, r2004 and less certainly r1149, r1234. The acc. appears: r363, r1073, r2000. 3) Perfect Ptcps. Forms without s are observed: 353 esteient absolu :fu 636 sunt venu :coneü 764 furent aturné :iniquité (acc. sg.). So 706, 841, 845, 947, 990, 1033, etc., etc. Forms with s are also plenty: 451 esteient venuz :receüz 1042 sunt fiechiez :piez (acc. pl.) 1096 erent rostiz :bruiz (acc. pl.) So 154, 428, 444, 946, 1210, 1309, 1603, 1740, 2094. In the Lays, of the cases where the accus. appears in the place of the nom., four are supported by two of the MSS., but Warnke, by ingenious emendation, suppresses the accus. in all four cases, although he is disposed to believe that Marie sometimes used the accus. in ptcps. of reflexive verbs.

9. Gerundive. The Espurg. shows the ordinary construction with aler :- ala aprismant :grant 937. So 1145, 1378, 1519. More unusual is 795: bone-ment en Deu esperant, Atent li quel vendrunt avant. Garner has quoted similar examples of this usage.¹

From the foregoing, we may describe the language of the Espurg. as substantially the same as that of the Lays, differing, however, from the latter as follows: 1) in several particulars attributable to an earlier date of composition (see above p. 15. 4.) ; 2) in allowing greater liberty in the matter of elision (go and jo) ; 3) in the substitution of the accusative for the nominative in substantives (one case), in the relative pronoun, and in predicate adjectives and participles. The last of these characteristics imparts a distinct Anglo-Norman coloring to the language.

H. ADDITIONAL ANGLO-NORMAN TRAITS IN THE MS.

1. fra 555 freit 465 frons 1340 for fera, etc. apella (2 syllables) 894 mandreit 448, 463 guerduin 2216 revelaciuns (4 syllables) 167. heremites 2142 is probably learned ; cp. hermite 2097, 2130 supported by the metre.

2. avera 2248 averunt 39, 207 avereit 452, for avra, etc. So overé 622 overaigne 623, 694. This e, as is well known, is introduced to indicate that the foregoing u is the consonant (v), and is found also in French MSS.²

3. in for ign as the designation of the palatal n ; esparniez 952, 954 moine 221, 1951, 1991 chanoine 399.

In baigns 1219 compaigns 2074 boisoigns 1982, the MS. seems to indicate the palatal n before the s of flexion. Elsewhere we have loinz (6 times) bainz 1184. The latter forms indicate that, as in palatal l,³ the mouillation at this period had disappeared in the inflected forms, and I would see in the forms

 Par les piez esteient pendanz
 Plusur, od chaëines ardanz ;
 E par les mains e par les braz 1075
 Li plusur, en dolurus laz.
 E si aveit [il] mulz de cels
 Qui pendirent par les chevells ;
 Li plusur, les testes aval,
 Pendirent en flame infernal 1080
 Faite de sulphre qui ne funt.
 Par les jambes lié amunt,
 Li un pendeient cruëlmement

 Vers aquilun erent turnanz.
 Li chevaliers s'esmerveilla 1235
 De cele gent qu'il esguarda :
 Kar il esteient altresì
 Cum s'il demandassent merci.
 Uns diables li demanda
 Pur quei de cels s'esmerveilla, 1240
 Qu'il vit atendre od tel poür,
 En [tel] peine e en tel labur ?
 "Altretel vus estuet souffrir, S'a nus ne vus volez tenir."
 Li chevaliers mot ne respunt. 1245
 Lever le quident sur le munt,
 Quant devers aquilun [i] vint
 Uns venz qui grant tempeste tint,
 Qui tut ensemble les leva
 Horriblement, puis sis jeta 1250

NOTES AND ADDITIONS

The heading: Ci parout des peines que sunt en purgatoire is to be ascribed to the Anglo-Norman copyist(s). Marie uses parole for parabolat (Es-purg. 1460; Lays, Milun, 190) while the shorter form is common in Anglo-Norman texts (Deu le omnipotent 106b; other examples in Burguy, I., p. 309).

Line 9. Eckleben (op. cit., p. 47) supposes that the translation begins here, representing the "Jussistis, pater venerande, ut scriptum vobis mitterem," etc., of the Tractatus. Dirai ço que j'en ai oï (l. 15) is indeed a fair equivalent to "quod de purgatorio in vestra retuli presencia." The feminine participles (ll. 9, 10), however, are decisive evidence that Marie is still speaking of herself, and that Roquefort was correct in saying (II., p. 407): "Marie prévient qu'elle a traduit ce poème à la prière d'un homme prudent et sage, dont elle a reçu des bienfaits," etc.

The translation begins with line 17, which closely reproduces the Tractatus: MSS. AC: Licet enim utilitatem multorum per me venire desiderem, etc., and the "jo" in ll. 17, 26, 29 is therefore Henry of Saltrey.

41. cumpuncciun. Perhaps in this and like words -ctiun should be written, an orthography frequent in the Computus (cp. ll. 199, 202, 207, and also Introduction, p. 93). So Lays, Chaitivel 20, destructiun. But as -ciun, in Marie as in the Computus, transcribes Latin -tionem (exposiciun, Computus 2679, etc.; devociun 42, 194, 583), the first c is probably etymological (learned) and hence the change seemed not warranted.

160. irunt is preferable. So dirai 187.

202. reance (MS. rance) is preferable. This substantive does not appear in Körting nor in Godefroy, but is no doubt to be attached to redimere—reëmbre as creance to credere (Cp. Cohn, Suffixwandlung, p. 74). The Espurg. shows recunter (not racunter) and hence it is preferable to read re- reançun 728 (MS. rancun) redemptionem, appears to owe its a to reance.

234. regehisseit is preferable.

260. eage is preferable ; so at 387, 398. Cp. é aetatem 2227, etc.

300. This is St. Bernard's Vita Malachiae (Migne, Cursus Patrol., clxxi., 1074). Cp. above, p. 11.

376. From this passage we must conclude that for Marie espurgatoire is feminine, since the participle mise obviously refers to that word. 2077 has : Que l'espurgatoire ert assise En s'eveschié e la fu quise. In 510, however, we have : U li purgatoires ert mis (:païs) where the masculine participle likewise stands fast, and where we have the gender we should expect from the neuter purgatorium and the mod. Fr. purgatoire (m.). It is a distinct tendency of the Anglo-Norman to make fems. of masc. nouns in final atonic e (cp. Suchier, St. Auban, p. 49) ; in the Alexis 101d adjutorium appears as fem. in MS. A, but as masc. in MSS. PL. G. Paris prefers the fem. There seems, therefore, no reason to deny that Marie has used espurgatoire as fem. and purgatoire as masc.

540. delivres. This adj. shows an -s in the n. sg. throughout the Espurg. See p. 43, 2.

558. des i que. The MS. has always de ci que. With Warnke, in the Lays, I have thought best to follow Suchier (Reimpredigt, p. 75), who regards des i que as the etymologically correct orthography.

564. The metre, as it stands in the MS., demands el (= le). This may be paralleled from Anglo-Norman texts but not from French. (Cp. Suchier, St. Auban, p. 31, 7.) The single example of el (= e le) cited by Gengnagel (Der Kürzung der Pronomina, etc. Halle, 1882, p. 8) is from the Passion.

577. li (le i) for the sake of the sense, though li in such cases is not unknown. (Cp. Tobler, Vermischte Beiträge, p. 168.) The usual construction in the Espurg., as in mod. Fr., is the accus. with intrans. verbs: les fist partir 978. (Cp. 1165, 1907); the dative with transitive verbs: cp. 581, 1528, 1949.

619. crois. This word translates cavitatem in Lat. K. (concavitatem AC) and means no doubt 'hollow.' Godefroy has not this meaning, unless it lies in Si l'en feri le crois del chief (Ogier 3123) which G. translates 'sommet de la tête.' The word belongs probably with the adj. crues (cruese, Lays, Bis. 93. MS. cruose). A word of the same form has the meaning 'gnashing' (Godefroy s. v. and Reimpredigt, p. 79).

690. wandiches (?) The text is here corrupt, and I have been unable to identify this word.

716. Since the contracted form beneiz for beneëiz (benedictus) nearly coincided with beneis (benedicis) the scribe apparently has failed to recognize the imperative, and, to the detriment of the metre, has written seit Deus as in 1567, 1679.

725. barnilment = 'en baron,' according to Godefroy, who quotes the Oxford Psalter, xxvi. and xxx. (ed. Michel.) There, as here, the word translates Latin viriliter. It is evidently baron (with shifted accent) + ilis + mente.

731. Ja endreit quant translates mox in Lat. ACK. Cp. Lays, Lanval 436.

816. bosoin is preferable.

955. Add this case of hiatus to those given, p. 29.

1046. avis unques = 'hardly' (cp. 1190, 1817). In all three instances this phrase translates Latin vix. This French form is wanting in Körting 8798, and in Diez,⁵ p. 428. Godefroy quotes examples from the Dialogues of St. Gregory and Turpin's Chronicle; of avis alone s. v. the substantive avis (*advisum) where, of course, it does not belong. At 1817, Roquefort printed Puis unkes for which, it should be noted, Orelli (Altfr. Gram., p. 371) correctly conjectured avis unques.

1123. ruee, roee, röta. The MS. has roue (5 times) and rove (twice). V is equivalent to u in the MS. Cp. v = u aut 84, 112; = u ubi 86.) There are indications that the copyist replaces o in hiatus by ou (Cp. Torn. Ant., l. 888, louier for loier OA,¹ and Espurg. 851, louer for loier locarium: 115 pouent for Anglo-Norman poent; 1090 joues gabatas.) This points to roe as the reading of the Anglo-Norman copy which lay before the scribe. The latter is indeed a common reading in other Anglo-Norman MSS. (E. g. Four Books of the Kings 255, Cambridge MS. of the Reimpredigt 123f). That it results from the usual Anglo-Norman reduction of Franco-Norman ue (oe) to o, can hardly be doubted in view of Anglo-Norman poent for pueent in Espurg. 154, 1320; Harley MS. of the Lays, Laustic 47; Vie de St. Auban 664, 1289; Deu le omnipotent 35c, etc. If this view be correct, roee or ruee is the proper form for Marie, and should be read Lays, Guigemar, 539, in place of roe. (Cp. also Reimpredigt, p. 80.)

1346. plungerunt* = demergeris Lat. K; demergent Lat. C. The corresponding passage in Jean Belet's version (in the British Museum MS., Additional 6534) has: te prendront moult tost e te plungeront el plus parfond d'enfer.

1369. The same use of nus as the rime-word of both lines of the couplet occurs 401, 1815; and of rus 2159; of els 1069. Warnke, Lays, Fraisne 341, has suppressed a similar case without good ground.

Other rimes of the kind in the Espurg. are : 1229 munt (montem) : munt (mundum) 2153 un : l'un.

1397. Crochier. MS. croker (same abbreviation as for ke). Whether we have here to do with an Anglo-Norman form (as sacker for sachier, cp. Reimpredigt p. 108), or with a substitution of the copyist, is uncertain.

1520. Mall's remark (Romanische Forschungen VI., p. 180, Note) that Marie has here misunderstood the Latin text is incorrect. Marie is not translating Latin A, as Mall supposed, but Latin K which has : vidit patriam = Marie's un país vit, a reading supported by the metre also. país recurs at 1563, 1575, 1580, 1584, 1643. Mall was misled by the false reading of Roquefort.

1707. aneire. Lat. K has : et lumen mentis . . . ab eo recessit (A has eciam for et). A second passage will throw more light upon the meaning of this word, which is of uncommon occurrence. 2101 Aneire apres soleil culchant corresponds to Lat. K : statem post solis occasum. Here the meaning is certainly 'straightway,' 'immediately,' which fits the sense of the first passage equally well, and also that in the Lays, Chaitivel 22 where Warnke has unnecessarily suppressed the MS. reading, and where G. Paris (cp. Romania XIV., p. 601) translates the word 'aussitôt.' Godefroy s. v. 2. erre (p. 329, col. 3) quotes the Josaphat of Chardri 233 : An eires, sanz plus de demurer Fist un paleis. . . and translates 'en hâte,' 'sur le champ.'

1822. de l'oeil*. Unfortunately, the Latin MSS. contain nothing at all answering to this line. The MS. has desoil, and it is possible that we have here Latin *solium—O. Fr. sueil with the meaning 'from the ground.' Cp. Benoît. Chronique II., 23761 (ed. Michel) : Il chairent par lur orguïl Del beau ciel en l'oscur soil. s and l, however, are easily confounded in the writing of this MS. (cp. sis for sil 973 : des for del 1403, 1622 and le for se 590 ; kil for kis 2090) and this fact, together with the sense and point of the passage (Marie wishes to say that the flame of the Holy Spirit was actually visible to the eye) convince me that de l'oeil is the correct reading. That the diphthong oe in Marie has the accent on e, which in turn has the quality e, is indicated with sufficient certainty by the rime cels : doels (Lays, Chaitivel 7.)

Whether the conjectured reading be correct or not, the rime at least shows that we are to see in the oil (or soil) of this MS. and those of the Lays, the Anglo-Norman reduction of oe, ue, to o, and that consequently we must class Marie among those writers (e. g., the scribe of the Oxford Roland) who show diphthongization before l mouillée. Cp. Suchier, Reimpredigt, Introd., p. xvi. ff., and Anger, Vie de St. Gregoire (in Romania XII., p. 145 ff.) who has the same forms : l. 31 veil volio :soleil*. Anger's work dates from 1212-1214.

2030. Cp. the Prologue to Guigemar, ll. 9-10 : Cil ki de sun bien unt envie Sovent en diënt vileinie.

The work of this continuator ends at l. 2184, at the close of the chaplain's speech. The subsequent matter is probably from yet another hand.

2213. The punctuation reproduces Lat. K : Si inquit magister infra. xv. annos deiceret magnam rem faceret.

2222. perneit. This, and not preneit, is to be read, since in the MS. the crossed p stands only for par and per, never for pra- and pre-. For the form, cp. Reimpredigt, p. 80, and the Computus, Introd. p. 97.

ERRATA

“ 40, l. 22, for ‘a pretonic syllable,’ read : ‘a syllable in mid-word.’

“ 45, l. 12, read : deceivre.

“ 62. l. 244 : read turnouent.

“ 88, l. 908 : for a read e.

“ 109, l. 1453 : for vissiuns read veïssuns.

BIOGRAPHY

I, Thomas Atkinson Jenkins, was born in Wilmington, Delaware, May 24, 1868. I received the Bachelor's degree in Arts from Swarthmore College, Pennsylvania, in 1887, and the same degree in Philosophy from the Wharton School of Finance and Economy of the University of Pennsylvania, in 1888. My studies at the Johns Hopkins University began in October, 1891, with French and Italian as my principal and first subordinate subjects. I entered the Romance Languages Seminary at New Year's 1892, and the following summer spent four months in Paris, for purposes of study. I continued my studies the following year with History as second subordinate subject, and held a University Scholarship for that year. In June, 1893, I received the appointment of Joshua W. Lippincott (Joint) Fellow of Swarthmore College for 1893-4, and by virtue of the same have been appointed a Fellow by Courtesy at this University. I have derived the greatest benefit in attending the Romance Seminary of Dr. A. M. Elliott, and from having heard the lectures of Dr. Matzke on Old French, of Dr. Adams on the Germanic Peoples, and of Dr. Bloomfield on Comparative Philology, to all of whom I take this opportunity to express my thanks.
